

On Wednesday, February 14, 1967, the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean gave the world a magnificent valentine: the world's first nuclear weapons free zone. Impelled by the Cuban Missile Crisis, all of the countries south of the US/Mexican border joined together in creating the Treaty of Tlatelolco, banning the development and even the presence of nuclear weapons in their territory. This zone of the world has already accomplished what the rest of the world is attempting to do: abolish nuclear weapons. They have inspired the creation of four additional zones around the world, including the first one in the Northern Hemisphere in October 2006 among the Central Asian republics. Today, the entire Southern Hemisphere is a virtual nuclear weapons free zone.

Join artists, musicians, writers, and human beings all over the planet in sending YOUR Valentine Thank You message throughout this 40th birthday year to:

The Atomic Mirror
P.O. Box 220
Port Hueneme, California 93044 USA

"Valentines to Tlatelolco" is part of the Nuclear Weapons Free Zone Initiative of the Atomic Mirror.
www.atomicmirror.org

Treaty of Tlatelolco
1st Nuclear Weapons Free Zone

www.atomicmirror.org

Please write your Valentine Thank You
message here:

Thank you for showing us the way to a nuclear weapons free world!!